

theguardian

OBSERVER ORGANIC ALLOTMENT BLOG

Things to do in October

Your expert guide to gardening this month

Get your garlic in now

On October 31st this year Halloween coincides with the day that the clocks change, marking the finale of the growing season.

Waste no time getting in a stock of cloches, fleece and other covers in expectation of the impending frosts. Finish preserving or storing the harvest by bringing it in, bottling it, pickling, drying, freezing or eating it up. A few vegetables can be left in situ. Parsnips and turnips are known to be improved by the frost. Carrots will keep fresher if left in the ground. Pile a thick mulch of straw or wood chips on them for safety's sake.

When frost has knocked back the Jerusalem artichokes, cut the stems down to about 30cm to mark the spot. The tubers can be dug up as and when needed. Make a mental note to clear the whole crop before spring when they start to grow again.

Autumn-sown broad beans produce the best crops

Garlic should be planted over the next few weeks. It likes a little frosting to get going. Choose a sheltered and sunny spot for it as it needs warmth thereafter. Don't start with a bulb from the supermarket as is likely to have been grown in a warm country, but buy one that has been acclimatized for the UK, either from a garden centre or - for a wider choice - direct from a grower.

There is a surprisingly wide choice for the garlic connoisseur. This includes elephant garlic which is great for roasting, Chinese purple garlic and an early variety from Aquila near Rome. The arrival of the pink gourmet garlic from the Lautrec region in S.W. France claims to be so delicious that its harvest is celebrated in a garlic fair each August.

Garlic makes a good companion for broad beans. If planted between the rows, the black fly, with its acute sense of smell, is repelled by the scent of the leaves. As October-sown broad beans will be harvested by May, they should duck the black fly season but the garlic is a good extra precaution.

Autumn sown broad beans produce the best crops. You can eat the tender top shoots while waiting for the crop. Reliable cultivars include 'Aquadulce Claudia', its successor 'Super Aquadulce' and 'Imperial Green Longpod'. 'The Sutton' is a good dwarf variety that fits well under cloches. Stake the taller types against winter winds along with your Brussels sprouts.

It is also time to sow field beans as green manure

This is also the last month to sow the broad bean's close relative, the field bean (Vicia faba minor) as a green manure. Very hardy, with deep nitrogen-fixing roots, the field bean is excellent for heavy clay soils, adding quantities of organic fibre to lighten up the soil texture. It can be grown in strips alternated with Italian rye grass. If short of space, the big seeds are easy to sow by hand between rows of other vegetables.

If you are feeling up to a challenge, summer cauliflowers can be sown early in the month in the cold frame. Dependable varieties, with the RHS Award of Garden merit, are the dwarf 'All The Year Round' and 'Gypsy'.

If you are thinking of growing some apples or pears, now is the time to taste the different varieties before choosing your container plants or ordering bare rooted specimens to be delivered in winter. Apple Day, which was founded ten years ago to celebrate British apples, orchards and all the traditions associated with them, will be coming up again on the 21st.

Taste apples before ordering your tree

Typical of autumn, along with the apple harvest and pumpkins, are the delicious green cob nuts appearing on the market stalls – a reminder to plant a hazel. Every good site should allow for a few. Though you are likely to be beaten hollow by the squirrels for the nuts, a hazel is worth having as small tree for wild life. It also provides pea sticks and bean poles and can be used for many dying traditional rustic crafts. It needs little attention and, unlike most nut trees, will grow and produce nuts in a gloomiest corner without complaint. Recommended reading is Nutshell Guide to Growing Hazelnuts by Clive Simms.

One good thing about the end of the growing season is that pests are in decline. However I gather that slugs will be busy laying eggs underground now ready for the next generation to emerge and plague us next spring. This is the last chance to zap them underground with nematodes before it gets too cold.

'Slug Gone' is a new product, that works on the hair vest principle. It is made from shoddy, a by-product of the wool industry. It comes as chemical-free pellets, which, when watered, will expand into an itchy mat that slugs and snails fear to cross but which does them no harm. It can be applied around the young winter brassicas if you are planting them out now. The benefits are three-fold. Apart from deterring slugs and snails, it makes an effective water retaining mulch and a cabbage collar. This will thwart pests laying their eggs at the base of plants and the resulting larvae hatching out perfectly positioned to gobble up your crops later on.

Previous

Blog home

Next

Ads by Google

"Shocking" 2012 Horoscope

Insert your birthdate & get answers about Past, Present & Future. Free

www.PremiumAstrology.com

British Expat In Spain?

£100k+ In UK Pensions? Download A Free Guide To QROPS & Expert Advice

Your.QROPSchoices.com/Guardian

Pictures of Gardens

Free garden design ideas. Create a beautiful garden.

oldhousephotogallery.com/Garden

Comments

5 comments, displaying Oldest first

Staff

Contributor

Comments on this page are now closed.

Scraggles
1 October 2010 6:17PM

is it going to be a cold winter?

Recommend \(0\)
Responses \(0\)
Report
Share

pencilset
1 October 2010 7:53PM

I'm struggling to get the motivation going here on Tyneside, damp and dark. Miserable ++ Still have lots of clearing up to do so hoping for some inspiration.

Recommend \(0\)
Responses \(0\)
Report
Share

SilasGB
1 October 2010 8:15PM

Hold on, I haven't finished September's jobs yet! Last weekend I did lots of cutting back shrubs and it was pretty therapeutic work actually. I have these great Jakoti handshears that made light work of it.

Recommend \(1\)
Responses \(0\)
Report
Share

sparclear
2 October 2010 6:47PM

@pencilset
here's a good excuse for leaving the autumn tidy-up awhile.....the dry tops of plants will hold frost/snow away from their crowns' tender shoots in the centre.

Recommend \(1\)
Responses \(0\)
Report
Share

and another....the wildlife prefers it not looking neat! But if you wait a few weeks, you'll be able to see where unwanted seeds are germinating, e.g. ivy, holly, ash, acers etc, easiest to get out if tiny.

and yet more.... there's a lovely feeling of borrowed time from a few sunny hours in winter, maybe just raking leaves off lawn and gutters, or getting some Christmas wreaths planned, the mood'll come back effortlessly. xx Sp.

Blamire
7 October 2010 11:01AM

I can heartily recommend the Slug Gone product mentioned in the article. It works brilliantly on all of my plants. No slug or snail problems. I buy it online at their website www.sluggone.com but it may be available elsewhere too.

Recommend \(1\)
Responses \(0\)
Report
Share

Comments on this page are now closed.

